

Hemp oil a growing choice for those with inflammation

With BOB LISTECKI

There is a revolution occurring in the drug therapy world. The lowly hemp plant – so famous for strong rope in days before nylon and Dacron – is surfacing as nature's very potent anti-inflammatory. And for those suffering the many diseases with inflammation as their root cause, this is promising news. Control inflammation and the symptoms, as well as the suffering, go away.

Enter Colorado Hemp Oil, a nutritional supplement by QuickSilver Scientific. With its nano-emulsified 300 delivery system, it promises to fix a lot of health conditions, at least 33 listed on our hand out.

How does it work?

Well, hemp contains two primary effective parts:

- tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) is what produces the euphoric and psychedelic effects. But ,whereas marijuana buds may contain as much as 30 percent THC, hemp rarely contains more than .03 percent THC.
- cannabinoid (CBD) is the medical side of the plant's makeup, accounting for up to 40 percent of the plant's extract. It is being researched for its use as a beneficial partner in treating a variety of ailments and symptoms. In hemp, CBD has no side effects and drug screens are negative.

Our bodies have an endocannabinoid system with 50 CB1 gene receptors and 250 CB2 gene receptors, ready to respond to the helpful anti-inflammatory effects the CBD delivers. Your body receives the benefit of the plant without experiencing any psychedelic effects.

Hemp oil or hempseed oil, such as Colorado Hemp Oil, is obtained by pressing hemp seeds. It is dosed under the tongue, in just a few pumps, and held for 30 seconds, swallowed and followed with some fluid. (But don't eat for 10 minutes.) Forty percent of the drug reaches the blood in the first 30 seconds. Relief has been reported within 2 hours.

Because there is no THC in the hemp oil, urine drug tests are negative. It is available over-the-counter – no card or prescription needed – in 30 and 50 ml sizes lasting about 15 to 60 days depending on patient response.
